

Turbine blade erosion refers to the wear and tear or damage that occurs on the surface of turbine blades, typically due to the impact of particles or droplets in the fluid (such as water or steam) that the turbine is processing. This erosion can lead to a reduction in the efficiency and performance of the turbine over time.